RUMORS OF WAR.

It looks very much as if England were going to have trouble again with the Zulus. Cetewayo's welcome home, has been anything but warm. His kingdom is to be divided up and a very large portion of it given to John Dunn, between whom and Cetewayo there never has been much love lost. This will be an occasion for bad feeling, and it is impossible to tell to what complications it may lead, The British residents will have all they can do in their endeavors to keep the peace. And to add to this feeling the Boers are far from satisfied with their relations to Great Britain and the surrounding tribes, and ask that the Transvaal Convention may be revised. Lord Kimberly's reply to the deputation does not augur very well for the success of the appeals made to the British Government, nor does it seem much in the mood to make concessions to the Boers. A rupture with England may be the upshot of all this. What cannot be obtained by negotiation may be attempted by force. Such is the nature of the Boers. Their success in the recent troubles in Zululand may lead them to think that they have matters in their own hands, and may encourage them to set Great Britain at defiance. That another war in that country may be averted is sincerely to be hoped, but should such an outbreak unhappily take place the knowledge gained by the former disturbance will assist materially in quelling it, and that, too, in a much more summary manner.

EXIT THE SUNFLOWER.

Oscar Wilde is said to have taken farewell of the hospitable shores of the western continent some $3,000 better off than when he arrived. Not at all a bad sum for one short season's work, and goes to show that the apostle of the sunflower was not —in common parlance—such a fool as he looked. He came to America with an avowed object—that of educating the people up to a high idea of the beautiful. The beautiful in himself was conspicuous in the wearing of long hair, knee-breeches and silk stockings, and an adoration of the sunflower. The people were to be educated up to all these from pure and philanthropic motives solely, but Oscar has turned out to be but poor clay after all, and with the ordinary mortal's hankering after the filthy dross. Now, why did Oscar take up the sunflower as his idea of beauty, and not the turnip or the cabbage? Why not, when he was in the business, take up the onion? The onion has been a long abused vegetable, although a healthy, succulent and nutritious one, and in some infectious diseases has often proved efficacious, and as a deodorant has few equals. Had Oscar only had gumption enough he would have adopted that vegetable, whose name in polite society is scarcely ever mentioned above the breath, and thereby revolutionised public taste, added considerably to his triumph and given to the onion that place to which it has been long and fairly entitled. But, joking apart, what has Mr. Wilde taught the American people? Simply this, that they are about as gullible a nation as any that can be found. They may contemplate the sunflower in secret, but Oscar openly gets away with the dollars. That's the rub, and that's where Oscar showed himself the more practical. Dressed in mediæval costume our fair American cousins have been sitting at the feet of this modern Gamalial seeking to draw in inspiration, and attain to the highest perfection by the contemplation of sunflowers, old teapots and cracked china. Now that their apostle has departed they are gradually awakening to the realization that their sunflowers, their china and old teapots are not as badly cracked as were the heads of their owners for the time being. The æsthetic craze, the popular craze as it was called, is about over in England, and we sincerely trust that the last of it has been seen in America. It was a paying business for Oscar, though, while it lasted, and now he has returned to his mamma with $3,000 of Yankee money. That's where the shoe pinches? What will the next craze be? Who can tell! It all goes to show how gullible people are, and that any long-haired fellow who has cheek enough, dresses in an eccentric fashion, acts and talks in a mildly lunatic sort of a way is sure of gathering a certain number of equally idiotic followers in his train, and not until after their leader has deserted them, with the dollars in his pockets, do they wake up to the fact that they have been passing through a period of emotional insanity, or, in other words, have been making most eggregious asses of themselves.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

There appears to be some mystery in connection with the Canadian North West Land Company, and not a little anxiety amongst some of the shareholders. There is a movement on foot to call a meeting of the shareholders of the Company to investigate its position, its relations with the Canada Pacific, and the reason of the Duke of Manchester's retirement.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Our columns will be open to correspondence upon any subject of general or local interest provided that the communications are brief, plainly written on one side of the paper, and are free from personalities of any kind, and are not couched in offensive language. We are determined that the columns of the TIMES shall be free from anything that could offend the most fastidious reader, and to this rule we intend to adhere most strictly. All communications must be accompanied with the name of the writer which of course will be in confidence, otherwise they will be summarily consigned to the waste basket. JUSTICE IN MANITOBA.

To the Editor of The Times

SIR,—I have read with much interest an article in the Christmas number of the Winnipeg Sun, entitled "Justice in Manitoba, its extent and administration compared with the legal business of Ontario," by the Hon. S. C. Biggs—having an interest in the matters referred to. According to the article contributed by the Hon. Mr. Biggs, it would appear that the number of writs and bills of complaint issued and filed in the Province of Manitoba in the year 1882, numbered in all 2,904, while in Ontario the number of writs issued out of the three divisions of the High Court of Justice, viz: The Chancery Division, Queen's Bench and Common Pleas Divisions, numbers in all in same year 1,730, and the Hon. Mr. Biggs quotes from the return of the writs issued at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, and comes to the conclusion that that return shows all the writs issued in the Province of Ontario. Hence Ontario is behind by 1,174 suits, and that the Ontario judges have not sufficient work; that is, comparing the amount of work done by them and that done by the judges in Manitoba. I would beg to draw the Hon. Mr. Biggs' attention to the following, and he can then be better able to write another article on the same subject There is a deputy clerk of the Crown, and a deputy registrar of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice in each County in Ontario, who issue writs at request of suitors, and the number issued by these officials should be added to the 1,730 writs issued at Osgoode Hall. What the number would be I have no idea, but I have no doubt the total number of writs issued in Ontario would be treble the number issued at Osgoode Hall. I will not say anything as to the jurisdiction of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, but will simply draw the Hon. Mr. Biggs' attention to the fact that there are other places than Osgoode Hall wh are writs are issued in Ontario, and that the writs issued at Osgoode Hall (1,730) are in 99 cases out of every 100 issued by members of the profession residing in Toronto, and represent to a great extent the business done merely by Toronto solicitors, and not by the profession residing outside of Toronto.

I am yours, &c.,

Prince Albert and South Branch

Are still forging ahead with that spirit of enterprise which has for three years distinguished the firm from all other concerns in Prince Albert. Our success has been mainly due to our extensive connection with all the principal wholesale houses throughout the Dominion. Mr. S. B. Fish, of Winnipeg, is a partner in our firm, whose years of experience as a leading wholesale merchant in the city of Montreal, together with the fact that he at present has all the commercial travellers who visit Winnipeg doing business in his ample rooms, which enables us to purchase goods in great variety at from 10 to 20 per cent. less than it is possible for others to do. We have at present the largest and best assorted stock in Prince Albert, many lines of which can only be found in our store. We would call special attention to our large and well assorted stock of Gold and Silver Watches of the best American movements, which we will sell at a discount of 25 per cent. for cash. Our winter goods having arrived late, leaves us with a heavy stock, which we do not wish to carry over, many lines of which we will sell at a slight advance to pay expenses. Do not allow yourselves to be defleeted from a profitable course by hollow and bombastic advertisements of a Jewish origin. Consult your own interest by calling on us. We guarantee to sell you goods cheaper than any other white or red man in Prince Albert.

THE NORTH WEST.

Mr. Peter Imrie, whose letters on the North West have attracted so much attention, is now on a visit to New York. The Herald, of that city, having referred to the fall of the price of the shares in the Duke of Manchester's land company in terms unfavorable to the Canadian North West, Mr. Imrie writes to that paper to defend the reputation of the country, or at least of that portion of which he has a favorable opinion. "Every one acquainted with the Canadian North West," says Mr. Imrie, "is aware that the best lands are comprised within the Red River Valley and the fertile belt which runs in a north-westerly direction, say from Winnipeg to Edmonton, where it branches northward over the great Peace River territory and southward about as far as Fort Calgary. Outside these limits the lands to the southward, with a few exceptions, are decidedly of second rate quality, being too light to produce heavy crops of grain, while to the north and east of the limits referred to neither the soil nor the climate can be deemed satisfactory." From these circumstances Mr. Imrie argues that the natural route for the Pacific Railway would have been through the middle of the fertile belt, from Winnipeg to Edmonton, and such indeed was the route selected by Mr. Fleming, but the Syndicate have located the line south of the fertile belt, to save in the first cost of construction, the country further north being broken by numerous deep rivers. "The Company," says Mr. Imrie, "determined to run their line almost due west from Winnipeg to Fort Calgary, through a country which I for one would not take as a gift if I could get the much richer lands of the fertile belt at anything at all like a moderate price. Throughout the second rate region referred to, however, the first cost of the railway will be comparatively light, while the company have also had the luck to get rid of the disadvantage of having to take an inferior quality of land grant by disposing of the same to the Duke of Manchester and others presumably unacquainted with the real merits of the matter."—Halifax Morning Chronicle.

(Mr. Imrie is a Scottish gentleman who came to Canada, a couple of years ago, in the interests of the agricultural population of the Old Country, and having acquired a great deal of information as to the capabilities of the North West for emigration purposes, his opinions are entitled to respect, and will have greater weight across the water than those of any anonymous scribbler, who seeks to decry the great North West).

A FOUR-LEGGED WITNESS.

Otto V. Brandesky and a trained Newfoundland dog named Leo appeared on the stage in Concordia Hall last spring. Crandesky sang hunting songs, and with the dog's assistance, went through a hunting pantomime. Last summer he lost the dog. Recently a Newfoundland dog ran up to him on First avenue and kissed his hand. Then they hugged each other. Charles Ross of First street came up and claimed the dog, but Brandesky insisted it was Leo, and the three went to Essex market to have the matter settled.

Brandesky offered to make his ownership of the dog apparent, and Justice Smith told him to go ahead. Brandesky drew an engraved collar from his pocket and whispered to the dog. The dog sat up and allowed him to put the collar on. "Kiss me," said Brandesky, and the dog sprang up and kissed him. Brandesky, handling his umbrella as a gun, brought it to his shoulder and then took aim with it. The dog crouched as if watching for game. He held out the umbrella and the dog jumped over it. He ordered the dog to imitate death, and Leo laid down and became rigid. Brandesky pretended to weep and Leo sprang up and embraced him. Brandesky began to dance and Leo rose on his hind legs and danced also. Brandesky approached the bar as he would the footlights and bowed. Leo also stood up and bowed to the Court.

"There is no necessity of further evidence of ownership," said Justice Smith, laughing. "The Court awards the dog to Brandesky."—N. Y. paper.

THE HOME COMING.

It was evening when they reached the station which served Milltown for its point of contact with the outer world. In old days when railroads were considered vulgar by some and immoral by others, Milltown had absolutely refused to be polluted by iron and steam. The clergyman had preached on the dangers to be dreaded by the influx of navvies—speaking of them—poor honest fellows—as if they had been brigands or buccaneers; the ladies were afraid that their horses would be frightened by the engine, and foresaw the most frightful catastrophes; and the gentlemen objected to the "strange blood" which the line would introduce among them. Social influences always strong in such a place as Milltown had therefore managed to secure intact the exclusive race which had been one of the characteristics of this little aristocratic south coast queendom. And Milltown, nine miles off was quite near enough for the conservative respectabilities which ruled in Milltown; and though some now rather regretted this as inhospitable, they were the people who did not keep carriages—most stood by their colors and thought they and their fathers had decided well in the past. These were the people with carriages and horses, who were at ite to leave home as often as they liked, and get about at all the variety that home denied them. To them it was shocking to contemplate the invasion of their cared for, well trimmed, garden-like valley by hordes of excursionists from the neighboring towns; and the idea of retired tradesmen, aping gentility, being enabled to rent houses, or maybe buy land and build amongst their own sacred seats, was one not to be borne for an instant. Whether by opening up markets and thus causing a brisker trade a railway would do the farmers and smaller shop-keepers good, was not an item in their calculations. It would bring strange residents, London visitors and cheap trip excursionists; and the Milltown gentry wanted none of them.

When the train deposited Patricia and her companion they found the Hamley carriages and the Hamley servants waiting for them. Their arrival caused that excitement which the coming of the rich men of the neighborhood always causes in such places; and the station master and the two porters bustled about and ran hither and thither to serve the owner of Abbey Holme with alacrity and zeal. Flies round the honey pot they buzzed expectant emphasis; and to do him justice the great man paid for their buzzing liberally. Though by no means generous by nature, pride disposed Mr. Hamley to public acts of ostentatious liberality; and he understood that a character must be paid for as well as other things more material. He was thus quoted by some as the freest hearted gentleman of the district; while others with whom he had graver business transactions, spoke of him between their teeth as "well! one who would skin a flint and make broth of the remainder. Besides, small as the triumph was, he was pleased that Patricia should see the estimation in which he was held when at home. He was aware that he had failed to impress her very profoundly so far as he had gone yet, and he thought that these evidences of his local dignity would do her good.

All she noticed, however, was that the men seemed sickeningly servile; and she wished they had not bowed so low or said "sir" so often. He, not knowing this was wonderfully affable today, with the affability of a superior person condescending to his brethren of low estate and the honey ran over at all sides, to the distress of the unaccustomed lips that gathered it.

Handed ostentatiously to the carriage, Patricia stepped in with the wrong foot first; by which she entangled he self in her dress and had to untwist herself before she sat down. The result was no, unlike the action of a dog turning round on the hearth-rug while making his imaginary bed.

"We must have you instructed how to step into a carriage, my dear," said Mr Hamley blandly, when they had fairly rolled away.

"Yes?" she answered. "Is there a right and a wrong way?"

"Is there a right and a wrong way?" He gave a scornful kind of snort. "Ask Dora," he added, in the tone of one who propounds something that is indisputable.

"I suppose Dora understands all these little things perfectly?" Patricia said, by way of courteous question.

"Little! Not so very little, let me tell you," Mr. Hamley answered loatily. She was touching his gods and profaning his sacred shrine. "If I had not been Mrs Hamley's husband for fifteen years now, to have learnt the full value of the proper graces. "These are things which all ladies should understand, and of which, if you'll excuse me for saying so, you are as ignorant as a cat. You will have to be learnt them without delay; and you will never progress if you commence by regarding them as little."

"I call them little things. I daresay they are quite good and right in themselves, only not so important as some others," said Patricia, with the steady look which Mr. Hamley disliked so much, visible under the carriage lamp shining full upon them. "Uncle always used to say that if we get the main things right, the rest would come when they were wanted."

"I do not see how the main things as you call them and I do not know what you mean either—will assist you to step into a carriage with the right foot foremost. And more than this, I cannot allow you to argue with me," said Mr. Hamley in a firm, heavy voice. "There is nothing more offensive to my mind than an argufying lady. You will remember this in future, I am sure."

"But is expressing an opinion arguing?" asked Patricia.

There you are! at it again! My dear young lady, you are positively dreadful! I say dreadful, and I mean it. What will Mrs Hamley say to you, or dear Dora, the gentlest of hea sex? Dora never argues, never objects. When Dora hears those perk remarks of yours she will be shocked; I know she will. A very little shocks both Dora and Mrs. Hamley."

"I will try not to shock them," said Patricia, patient but astonished. Truly life was having its new leadings printed heavily for her benefit.

"You must not: which is more than trying. And for one thing you must really be less radical than you are now. You are out and out the most independent radical for a lady I have ever seen. Positively astonishing! And wherever you could have picked it all up, and your uncle she son of a K. C. B. and the brother of such a woman as Mrs Hamley I don't know."

"But I am not a radical at all, Mr. Hamley," said Patricia, opening her eyes and speaking very earnestly. "I understand nothing about politics, and am neither radical nor tory scarcely indeed know the difference between them."

"And I say you are," repeated Mr. Hamley, who had used the word in a provincial and not a political sense; "so let us have no more discussion. Your duty is to be humble minded and obedient; to order yourself lowly and reverently to all your pastors and masters and those who are put in authority over you," he added, with a happy reminiscence of the catechism, as she thing and stone he thought would have most effect on this odd young person.

BLURRED PRINTING

THE MOON IN JOURNALISM.

A Novel Enterprise and Some Thoughts Suggested Thereby.

The most remarkable journalistic experiment of this or any other country was announced in the New York Tribune lately. The inmates of the insane asylum on Ward's Island are about to begin the publication of a weekly newspaper called the Moon. The project is entirely their own, and they are to furnish all the contributions, set the type and print the paper. Of many previous newspaper ventures it has been said that their authors must have been insane, but now for the first time we are to behold a thoroughly insane newspaper produced by self-confessed lunatics, for they are to put a cut of their asylum on their title page and its name on the date line. In frankness, therefore, the new venture will surpass many of its contemporaries. We have in mind several newspapers whose inexplicable conduct for many years would become suddenly plain if the simple announcement were made that their editors are insane. By concealing that fact they show an absence of candor which puts them a long way behind their rivals on Ward's Island.

The publication of the Moon is made possible by the presence on a large number of practical printers in the asylum. Statistics show that the largest number of lunatics from any one class are printers. Why this is so we do not know, but it may be that after several years of service the accumulation of remorse for typographical errors becomes so great as to overthrow the reason. If the printers were guilty of all the offences of this kind charged to them, that would inevitably be the effect. Next to printers the cigarmakers furnish the largest number of insane now on the island. This fact is not so difficult of explanation. If a cigarmaker has a conscience it is impossible to see how his reason could permanently withstand the strain of rolling Connecticut leaf into cigars and packing them away in boxes labeled "Pure Havanna" and bearing the names of all the best foreign brands. It will be no surprise to the seeker after a genuine imported cigar to hear that insanity is the natural fruition of a large proportion of cigarmakers. Indeed, we are afraid he will take a grim satisfaction in saying that it could not be otherwise.

But to return to the Moon. The name will strike everyone as surely appropriate. The moon has for some reason been associated with lunatics and lovers, both of which classes are said to be especially susceptible to its gentle influences. Profound scientists, who have devoted much time to observe the phenomenon, assure us that when a sedate and well-regulated young man subjects himself to a strong moonlight in a secluded spot, with a young woman on his arm, he is irresistibly impelled to say and do things, which to the eye of the cool, practical observer are little less than insane. Upon a chronic lunatic the rays of the moon are said to have a subduing but at the same time aggravating effect. He is less noisy, but a little more "luny." It is also a time-honored tradition that anyone who sleeps with the moon shining in his face sees his grandmother in forms a thousand times more awful than the most ingenious and intricate mince pie has ever been able to inspire. All these facts sustain the wisdom of choosing the moon as the name for the crazy men's paper. It is not the first time the name of a heavenly body has been taken as a title of a very earthly newspaper. This country is fairly spotted with Stars and Suns, some of them sane and others very insane. We have no doubt that the Moon will be very much like other newspapers, and will be a good deal more sane than many of them.—N. Y. Tribune.

WINNIPEG HOTELS.

The amount of business done in the principal Winnipeg hotels, during the past year was simply enormous. We give some of the figures; at the Brunswick, which charges $2 per day, the register shows the number of guests for latter part of the year, August 100, September 850, October 960, November 920, December 750. At the Queens, $2.50 a day, the business for the year was estimated at $100,000, double that of the previous year. At the Winnipeg, years receipts $60,000. Whalen House, only opened in March, receipts $80,000. The number of guests in this house was of course very large. In March 1,000, April 1,400, May 1,300, November 1,200. In the Grand Central the receipts were between $50,000 and $60,000. The rates in most of the hotels is $2.00 a day, and from $5 to $14 per week. This is not a bad business for the "Prairie Village" whose doom, together with the surrounding villages and towns, according to the TRUTHFUL correspondent of the London, England, Financier, is sealed.

TOWN NEWS.

The grist mill at Duck Lake is running night and day.

Mr. Hiram Harkness left for Redhill, in charge of Mr. John Macdonald's mill, to thresh for Major Morton.

Ex-constable Ramsay is on his way to Prince Albert, with Moore & Macdowall's machinery. The trail is very heavy.

A large party left here lately for Candle Lake, eighty miles north east of here, for white fish. They are expected back to day.

Mr. Jos. Bear, of the South Branch reserve, had his grain threshed out last week. He had 600 bushels, not bad for an Indian.

Contractors will be glad to hear that there is three times the number of logs cut and banked this season, that there were last season.

Mr. Harry Keenan, ex-Sergt. of the Mounted Police, has entered the firm of Messrs Peterson & Hannafin, Real Estate Agents and Auctioneers.

Those who have hay around the creek, had better look after it, as it is reported that horses that are wintering out have started to winter on the stacks.

Major Geo. Davidson, of the H. B. Co. Fort Pitt, arrived here on the 4th inst. The Major is looking well and we believe that he intends to reside here in future.

Just arrived at J. R. McPhail's, Box and Parlor Stoves, Glass, Paints, Oils, Rope, Axe Handles, Cutlery and other Hardware; Lamp Goods, Granite Ironware, etc.

Mr. Jas. Isbister's mill has returned from the South Branch, having finished threshing on Chief John Smith's reserve. He reports a yield of twenty bushels to the acre, not bad for Indians.

Remember the Entertainment and Social to be held in the Methodist Church, on Thursday Evening, the 15th of February. A good time may be expected. See advertisement and posters.

Capt. H. S. Moore, of the firm of Moore & Macdowall, has purchased the farm, lately occupied by Jas. Isbister, from Mr. Gordon. The farm is adjoining the railroad lands at the South Branch.

The return match between the married and single members of the Saskatchewan Curling Club, will be played on Saturday afternoon next, at 2 o'clock sharp. The unfavorable state of the weather prevented the match coming off last Saturday.

Messrs. Dobbie and Schram have gone out prospecting on Red Deer Creek. Judging from the marvellous speed with which Satan and his drivers disappeared over the hill, it is but fair to suppose that they meant business and have reached their destination ere this.

J. C. Mackenzie has received a fresh supply of Men's, Women's and Children's Overshoes. Also Men's and Women's Congress Felt Boots; and a big supply of all kinds of Moccasins, which he is offering at cost. Call and see for yourselves. Remember Brown's brick store.

The weather took a change for the better on Sunday, which is quite a relief after the long cold snap. The high winds which commenced on the morning of the 4th inst. would seem to give weight to Prof. E. Stone Wiggins' prediction of high winds on the 6th inst. Look out for a big wind storm on March 9th.

Ex-Sergt. Keenan and Sergt. Creadon have returned from Duck Lake, where they learned from Col. Herchemer, who was on his way to Battleford, that we are to have a weekly mail after the coming mail. The extra horses for the purpose have been distributed at the different stations along the trail.

It is reported that Mr. Thos. Salter got lost on the night of the 4th inst. on his return from the lower flat, where he had been on business which detained him till a late hour. When about half way home his horse left the trail in a northerly direction, and Mr. Salter did not discover the mistake till the horse arrived at Mr. Nelson's hay stacks. Though the night was very cold Mr. S. did not suffer much through the mistake.

A meeting was held on Friday evening, Feb. 2nd, in Messrs. Paterson & Hannafin's office, to arrange for a concert, for the purpose of obtaining funds to establish a brass band in Prince Albert. Mr. E. Gowans being installed as chairman, the subject was fully discussed in all its bearings, when it was decided to hold the entertainment on Thursday evening, February 22nd. The following gentlemen were appointed as a committee of management. Messrs. Peterson, T. N. Campbell, F. O. Davis, E. Gowans and H. B. Wey.
